

In physics, force equals mass times acceleration.

Energy can be converted from one form to another, but it cannot be created or destroyed.

This is known as the law of conservation of energy.